THE office and duties of the Comptroller of Scotland are described in the "Discours Particulier d'Escosse," drawn up for the information of the French Court, in 1559, in the following terms: "Le Controlleur est receuueur general des droicts appellëz le proprieté; la quelle gist ez fruits, rentes et reuenus ordinaires des duchéz, comtéz et autres terres et seigneuries qui sont propres a la couronne, soient vniz ou non vniz à icelle; le reuenu des quelles est contenu ez roolles de l'eschequier. . . . . .

Aussy est ledit controlleur et receuueur general de toutes les grandes coustumes de toutes et chascunes villes, portz et haures de ce royaume." The fluctuating and uncertain revenue derived from these sources was applied in the first place to the Royal Household, under the administration of the Comptroller; and in a Court like that of Scotland, striving to cover real poverty with a shew of splendour, we are not surprised to meet with enactments of the legislature repeatedly and vainly attempting to secure the "inbringing of oure souerane lordis propirte and casualiteis yeirlie to his chekker, sua that his thesaurar and comptrollar may wele be furnist for perfurnessing of all sic thingis quhilkis pertenis thame to do, And that in tymes cuming [thai] sall haue na cause to complenye bot in thare awne defalt and negligence."[1]

It is to be feared that the efforts occasionally made to introduce a systematic and rigid economy into the Royal expenses were scarcely more effectual. In 1525, soon after the Queen Dowager and the Douglases, had taken the place of Albany in the government of the Kingdom and the custody of the young King, we find it recorded in the Books of Parliament, that "Robert Bertoun of Ovirberntoun comptroller schew how the expense of the Kingis houshald is risin sa gret that his propirtie may nocht beir the samin, and daly apperis to rise gretar becaus na ordour is put therto be the lordis havand auctoritie of the samin; certifying to the lordis forsaid, that without thai prouidit sum gud ordour and reule to his houshald it is nocht possible that his Grace may be sustenit to his honour as efferis."[2]

Numerous regulations followed in that Parliament regarding the form of the Royal Household, and the persons who should compose it; and it is probable that to this period, and to the same Comptroller, is to be ascribed the commencement of the separate formal Record of the expenses of the Royal Household; at least we have no evidence of its existence of an earlier date than the commencement of the imperfect series of volumes which still exist, extending from 1525 to 1553.

[1] Act. Parl. 1540, c. 13.

[2] Penult. July 1525.

Ten of these are preserved in the General Register House at Edinburgh. The earliest of the series, embracing part of the years 1525–6, is in the Library of the Faculty of Advocates, and the volume recording the expenses of the year 1538–9, is in the possession of the Earl of Aberdeen, and has been the subject of some observations by Sir Henry Ellis, published in the 22d volume of the Archaeologia.

It has long been considered by those conversant with the records and antiquities of Scotland, that much curious information might be afforded by publishing this series of accounts; but the great sameness of detail which Sir Henry Ellis remarks, and which runs through the whole record, has suggested this attempt to give in a condensed shape, and without the endless repetitions of the original, somewhat of its historical information, with whatever is curious or important as illustrating the manners of the period.

The following sheets consist of extracts from the first four volumes of the Record. In making the selection, those accounts have been preferred which served to convey historical information, by pointing out the movements of the Court or otherwise, or which exhibited the greatest variety of articles of domestic use, and shewed their prices. In the body of the work, each extract consists of the expenditure of at least a whole day,—and occasionally perhaps too much detail is allowed, with a view to include the whole expenses of some Court Festival. Where insulated entries occurred of some interest, or such as served to mark only the movements of the King or the Court, they have been placed in the Appendix.

The original Record, though carefully and even elaborately written, is so full of the solecisms of an illiterate scribe, that any attempt at correcting them must have changed the character of the book. The text is therefore to be considered as a literal transcript of the Record.

There is subjoined to this Notice a communication to the Editor by Professor Fleming, of King's College, Aberdeen, containing some notes upon the subjects of Natural History occurring in the volume. These must derive much authority and value from that gentleman's well-known character as a Naturalist.

The List of terms which follows, is intended to collect into one view all the articles of entry that occur in the book, and where possible, to explain such of them as are either of rare occurrence or occur in an unusual shape or sense. It has been prepared by Mr Kilgour, the gentleman who made the selections from the record.

The vignette on the title page is from a carving formerly on the roof of one of the apartments of the house of Mary of Guise in the Castlehill, Edinburgh. The arms are those of Scotland impaled with Lorraine.

It may be mentioned that another member of the Bannatyne Club proposes, in a separate volume, to continue this series of extracts, so far at least as to include the years of the successive marriages of James the Fifth.

KING'S COLLEGE, ABERDEEN,
10*th October* 1836.

DEAR SIR,

I have so far complied with your request, as to subjoin a few remarks respecting the ANIMALS furnished to the Royal table, as they appear in the records of the "Liber Domicilii."

It is matter of regret that the Clerk, or Larderer, in making the entries, should have considered it requisite to Latinise the names of the animals,—a task which he has executed frequently without judgment, and by which their antiquarian value has been greatly diminished. Though there is no difficulty in referring the strange epithet, aves morales, to the moor-fowl, no one need hesitate to affirm that the word Bronoscopi was never the trade term employed by a fishwife.

As the entries do not appear in any regular order, and as the same nomenclature is not preserved throughout, there is much left for the imagination to supply in reducing the terms to modern language. Not a few, indeed, of the terms, might admit of several interpretations. Ron and Ronis, for example, might have been supposed applicable to the Seal, had it not occurred in one case in the same entry with the Selch ; it might refer to Raans, the she-crab, (Sibb. Mem. Balf. 121.); to the Rawn-fleuk, the Newhaven fishwife's name for the Turbot, or even to Roe in general.

As I do not attach any importance to my remarks, from the circumstances referred to, I cannot expect that they will be regarded by you in any other light, than as indicating a disposition to cooperate with you in your interesting researches.

Yours, &c.

JOHN FLEMING.

In the enumeration of the animals in the "Liber Domicilii," the domesticated and wild QUADRUPEDS occupy, as might have been looked for, a prominent place among the supplies for the Royal table.

The Ox, as at present, contributed largely to the stock of a larder, but under circumstances somewhat limited. Winter-fed cattle being in a great measure unknown, the use of fresh beef was chiefly confined to the grazing season, when a merta herbalis or boves pasti could be purchased. During the winter season, salted beef was in use. This, in some cases, appears to have been procured from a considerable distance, as reference is made to the merte salse Orchadie, the Orkney beef being probably then in repute. Veal, as vituli parvi, and vituli magni, appears to have furnished a seasonable supply in spring and summer. There does not appear to be any mention made of the wild cattle of Scotland in any of the entries of presents or purchase.

The Sheep ranks next to the Ox as an article of summer food, the low state of agriculture preventing an uninterrupted supply. Salted mutton does not appear to have been in use. Lamb, in the season, occurs as a common article of supply; nor was the peculiar modern national dish, "Sheep's-head and trotters," a rarity at the King's table; entries occasionally appearing in the work, of capita arietum, and pedes ovium. The goat does not appear to have occupied a place in the larder, though the kid is occasionally referred to.

Swine appear but seldom among the animals purchased, though on one occasion, twenty-four salted carcases are recorded, accompanied by as many merte salse from Orkney. Pigs, porcelli, were in common use. A few instances occur in which the terms Aper and caput Apri appear in such circumstances as to restrict the meaning to the domesticated, and not to the wild Boar.

Rabbits, old and young, appear to have been extensively employed, while hares and leverets occur less frequently in the list.

The supply of Venison seems to have been limited in an extraordinary degree, as but few references are made to the Roe, Rabuck, or Rais, or to the Stag, cervus magnus. This, however, may be explained in part, by the circumstance of the residence of the King being in the best cultivated districts, and by keeping in view the extreme difficulty, in those days, of transporting from a distance the carcases of such animals as the wooded and remote regions could have furnished.

The table of the King appears to have been frequently supplied with dishes unknown at present in this country, as in use by either rich or poor. Thus, the Seal was purchased for the larder, either whole or in quarters, and entered as Phoca or Selch. The Porpoise, too, was in demand in similar circumstances, under the epithet Pellok. It may here be added, that the monks of Dunfermline had a grant from Malcolm IV. of the heads of the porpoises caught in the Forth, except the tongues; and that the bones of this small kind of whale, found a few years ago near the Monastery of that place, must be regarded as the offals of the kitchen, instead of the relics of a deluge.

The catalogue of the Birds used at the Royal table, though somewhat limited in reference to the domesticated species, is not destitute of interest in regard to the wild fowl.

Among the gallinaceous birds, the common fowl, under the name of Pultre, occupies a prominent place, appearing to have been furnished in abundance. Capons, though at present scarcely to be met with even in Kaen lists, appear to have been in equal plenty, and at times purchased as capones pasti. Chickens were procured at the suitable season, and the supply of eggs seems to have been tolerably regular. The Turkey, Guinea-fowl, and Pheasant, appear to have been wanting, though the Peacock holds a place among the gifts to the King.

Though the catalogue of domesticated gallinaceous birds be thus limited, it is otherwise with reference to the wild birds. Partridges do not appear to have been so frequently purchased as grouse, the aves morales, which seem to have abounded, along with Black-cock, galli nigri. The Quail is occasionally noticed as the Qualze ; while a bird under the term Coturnix, obtained from August to April, and which might have been suspected as similar, is probably the Water Rail. There is no reference to the Ptarmigan or the Capercaillie ; a circumstance which may be accounted for, as in the case of Venison, from the locality of the Court and the limited means of transport.

The common Pigeon is but rarely noticed in the supplies, the preference, as at present, being given to the young, pulli columbarum. The Wood Pigeon, under the term Turtur, was occasionally purchased.

With the exception of Larks, which are occasionally referred to, the list of land birds is thus limited. The catalogue of Water Fowl is more extensive.

Among the Waders, the Heron is occasionally recorded under the names Herle, Ardea, and Ciconia. Though the latter term might seem to refer to the Stork, it is to be observed that several of the dates of purchase do not accord with the migrations of that bird. The Crane, grus, is likewise occasionally referred to. Grues plurimi is a phrase employed by Lesley in reference to this bird as a denizen of Scotland.

While, as might have been expected, Woodcocks, Plovers, Snipes, and Redshanks, occupy a place in the catalogue, Dotterels are likewise noticed as having been obtained, as at present, in the spring, on their passage to the breeding-ground.

The common Duck and Goose, domesticated and wild, occupy a prominent place among the water-fowl,—the latter, however, in the greatest abundance; with occasionally Swans, Teals, Clackis or Bernacle, and Sheldrake, together with Auce Solares, by which Solan Geese are probably referred to.

The Fishes employed at the Royal table appear to have been numerous in point of species, but they are expressed in the entries in such terms as to render mere conjectural attempts at a correct nomenclature of very little value. On this account, it seems unnecessary to do more than refer to a few of the terms, remarkable as indicating the extent and regularity of the supply, or the singular kinds selected for the table.

In the list of the Sea Fish, which constituted the chief supply, the Herring occupies a prominent place, whether in a fresh or salted state, from the West or East coast; while, contrary to what is generally supposed, the Red Herring, Alleca rubea, was not unknown in those days.

Many kinds of White fish appear to be referred to, as Mulones recentes and Mulones aridi, terms by which the Cod seems to have been designated; while the other allied kinds are specified under the terms albi pisces, Ware codlings, Podlokis, Codlinges, Merlingis, merlingis estivales, lithis, and Leing, in addition to stockfish, speldings, and pisces aridi.

The Flat fish, under the terms turbones, Holibut, Rones, Turbot, Bronoscopi (Uranoscopi ?), Flounders, seem to have been liberally supplied, and occasionally the Sole. No reference is made to the Skate, unless we are to consider the fish in common use in a recent and dried state under the term Rigadia, as of that sort.

Many other kinds of sea-fish are frequently referred to, as Sandeels, Fundolis; Blennies, Greenbans; Gurnards, Crunans; Lump-fish, Padils; Angler, Murlzeon; Sea-cat, Cattus marinus. The Spirling, Conger Eel, and Lamprey, have likewise a place, while M'fische, a term of frequent occurrence, is of very doubtful import.

At the head of the fresh-water fish must be placed the Salmon, as having been extensively employed in a fresh and salted state, and as kipper. Trouts, too, under the terms Truttis, Truttis torrentium,—laquearum,—marini and magni, together with Eels, Perch, and Pike, frequently find a place. The occurrence of the Pike in the list of fish purchased in 1525, is in opposition to the generally received opinion, that this fish was introduced in the reign of Henry VIII. in 1537, though little doubt need be entertained respecting the validity of its claims to be considered as a native fish.

Among the naked Molluscous animals, the Polupi or Cuttle-fish frequently occupy a place. In the enumerated Shell-fish, the Oyster, from the West and East coast, is frequently noticed. Entries likewise appear of Mussels, Cockles, Concis, Razor-fish, Spouttis, Scallops, Pectines, and the Horse-mussel, Pectines aquæ dulcis. The Bucky and Limpet complete the list.

In the Crustaceous animals, the supply appears to have been confined to the common Crab and Shrimp; the latter, as is common in many places of Scotland at present, is erroneously referred to under the name of Pran.
